Battle.Q: How to make a function that has an input and output as a parameter? I have a function that implements an algorithm. I want to create a function that implements a second algorithm with a different input/output. I use the code below to define my function: import numpy as np def exampleFunction(f,a,b,x,y,z): return f(x) + f(y) - f(z) exampleFunction(np.sum,a,b,x,y,z) exampleFunction(np.log,a,b,x,y,z) This results in the following error: TypeError: 'argument of type function' is not iterable Is it possible to create a function that uses as input an existing function that has a different input/output? A: As you're passing functions to the function, instead of passing the function itself, they need to be called to allow the functions to process the arguments passed to the function. Use the
