The hotel has a very friendly and helpful staff, but quite honestly, the space for what they had for us was a very large suite that appeared to be more of a suite with a sitting room. Nothing fancy but that's fine since we weren't there for the reasons that one would be staying there (eg. for a business meeting). Rather, we were there to spend some much needed quality time with our daughter and family and it was a nice bonus of our visit since we aren't always surrounded by them as we frequently travel. The location is perfect, right in the heart of the city with so many restaurants and cafes surrounding the hotel. We used car2go since we spent most of our time out and about, so being able to use the car2go station to get around was great (even if parking was relatively pricey for the hourly rate). We were traveling with two toddlers so it was nice to have the jetted tub in our bathroom, plus two extra pillows and high chairs. The refrigerator could be a bit tricky to get out, but we were able to figure it out with a bit of extra time. Overall, we really enjoyed our stay and would recommend it to anyone looking for an affordable and convenient downtown location, while also being very close to everything Disney has to offer

Search The Last Stop Brewery sign sits up on the bar of a little tavern in the suburbs of Washington, D.C. It's not long after opening time, but I'm eager to taste their good brew, so I force myself into the little bar. As I sit down to sample the wares, I see a plump, red-faced man sitting alone at one of the back tables, staring over his beer at the American flag that hangs in one corner, waving gently in the gently breezes that emanate from the antique fans on the walls. "Please," he asks, "can I have a gin and tonic, with or without ice?" "Of course," I reply. "I have a nice Carpano with soda." As I mix the drink, I consider my unusual request. The man's request might be unusual, but more importantly, it's a ridiculous one. How could any barkeep serve a gin and tonic without ice? Anyone who has ever had a straight gin and tonic knows that it needs an ice cube to form the proper, cooling beverage that is our national drink of choice. No, it cannot be done! This is a moment to regain my composure and gather my courage. There will be no gin and tonic with a lack of ice, not at The Last Stop. With a purposeful cheer I drink the gin and tonic, thanking the bartender at the same time. Our new bar is called The Last Stop, and its mission is to serve great beer, great food, and great cocktails at a great price, in a friendly and welcoming place. We are a little tavern that treasures old things and makes new things all the time.Q: How can I check if a Node is allowed to be inserted into a class? I'd like to add the method isAllowed() to a class to check if one node is allowed to be inserted into that type. I feel like this is a really common scenario, so I am assuming it exists somewhere already. I've seen this done before in textbook source code. I was wondering if the class inheriting the nodes C++ abstract base class has something like this already? Thanks. A: Perhaps you could write a virtual protected abstract method. The method should return a bool, indicating whether the node is currently
