EnjoyWell, now that a presidential candidate has said that he would be open to the idea of charging supporters to attend rallies, the underbelly of the Internet is buzzing with the idea that, say, parking meters could be used to keep folks from attending candidates' events and "keep order" at the expense of free-speech rights. Indeed, the idea has been floated as a relatively novel way to deal with crowds of supporters that are blocking a police checkpoint from coming into a rally. As noted in this space last week, at least four states have actually had such laws on the
