Q: How to setup django static files in apache I've got a static files server (using django-staticfiles) running on a single node using Apache on AWS. Files are served just fine, but of course only from the non-root folder. I know I have to run manage.py collectstatic in a separate folder, and that my apache config would look something like this `WSGIScriptAlias /var/www/html/foo/app/static/css/layout.css WSGIScriptAlias /bar/var/www/html/foo/app/static/appbar/` How do I make Apache load those files from a different folder? The docs only have examples of the staticfiles itself being served statically, as well as having the current staticfiles setting run in a different folder, but not all of those at once. A: Write your url patterns like this `urlpatterns = patterns('', url(r'^static/(?P.*?)$', 'django.views.static.serve', {'document_root': settings.STATIC_ROOT}))`, I used the above approach with success. Prostaglandin E2 stimulates chondrocytes to form hyaline cartilage. Three and six millimolar prostaglandin E2 treatment to explants of developing avian embryo epiphyseal cartilage induces the deposition of extracellular matrix in a manner that resembles the formation of hyaline cartilage. Electron microscopic examination of the effect of prostaglandin E2 on the cells of the cartilage indicates that there is a clear change in the morphology of the cells by thirty minutes, and that both the fine fibrillar collagen and proteoglycan accumulations appear during the first hour. Some changes in the morphology of the cells are associated with cessation of the collagen synthesis. The application of 10(-6) M dexamethasone greatly inhibits cartilage induction and appears to inhibit both the prostaglandin E2 effect and even the 1 mM concentration of dexamethasone normally inhibiting collagen formation. The data supports a model in which prostaglandin E2 is responsible for cartilage induction, and that activity is enhanced by the presence of dexamethasone. The findings support the hypothesis that

The antiviral activities of acyclovir, its arylamine and arylhydrazine derivatives, and related antiviral substances, were evaluated in vivo against herpes simplex virus (HSV) and varicella-zoster virus (VZV) by challenge infection of mice. Acyclovir was confirmed to be much more potent than its arylamine and arylhydrazine derivatives, but against HSV, none of them exhibited higher antiviral activity than acyclovir. Acyclovir was effective for the prevention and the treatment of HSV. As for varicella-zoster virus, some of the compounds exhibited good antiviral activity, although some of them were not as potent as acyclovir.
