"Warp Factory" is a combination of interplanetary automata-building challenge, puzzle game, and fun physics experiment. The player takes control of an unnamed laboratory manager who is tasked with building a factory in the centre of the game's solar system. The core of the game revolves around an arbitrary and randomly generated world, whose geometry and surface change in every level. The player must build industrial engines, initiate portal communications between planets, and assemble space stations and even moons to get to the core. But the atmosphere, the shape and size of the stars, and the time it takes to reach the core are all completely arbitrary and are never the same in any playthrough. As the player progresses through this universe, he or she will be challenged with a collection of increasingly difficult challenges.

SALT LAKE CITY -- A Utah mom who criticized a new school dress code in a viral Facebook video has withdrawn her complaint because she says she needs to focus on her children. Erin Palin said she didn't know she would be associated with a nationally publicized video when she posted the video on Facebook in late November. "I definitely feel like I was duped," she told KSL. In the video, Palin criticized how much clothing the "new" dress code requires students at the Juan Diego Catholic School in Murray, Utah, to wear. In the video, she accused the school's principal of trying to teach students to be prostitutes. "They're walking down the hall with an even cut of their bottoms showing," Palin said in the video, as she pulled an elastic band from her daughter's waist, showing underwear. Despite her comments, Palin said she hasn't experienced any negative consequences at the school as a result of her viral video. However, the post quickly spread across social media, and her complaint caught the attention of media outlets. "The school's concerned about a 16-year-old with a mic and her parents coming in to cause trouble,” Palin told the Deseret News. In a recent Facebook post, Palin claimed that the school told her she could speak at the school after the dress code video, so she’s decided to step aside and do that. “I am going to be speaking at the school in the near future,” she wrote. “Knowing this dress code makes it hard

Q: SelectedItem on combobox use getter/setter I know how to set selected item in combobox using setter method and I know that it uses getter for selected item out of whole list. But what if I want to use the getter only for selected item? `addProperty("combo", mComboBox, "selectedItem", "getSelectedItem", "setSelectedItem", "isSelected").toComboBox();` I have some functions that generate some Object and I need to pass that Object down to the combobox. the Object doesn't have a `getSelectedItem` function, only a getter for whole list of data. A: `addProperty("combo", mComboBox, "selectedItem", "getSelectedItem", "setSelectedItem", "isSelected").toComboBox();` This is ok, but when you perform the initialisation you have to set the selected item. It should be like this: `addProperty("combo", mComboBox, "selectedItem", "getSelectedItem", "setSelectedItem", "isSelected").toComboBox().select("some string");` The rest is exactly the same like when you use the getter. Vanuatu Islands Times The Vanuatu Islands Times is a daily newspaper in Port Vila, and is the oldest newspaper in the South Pacific. The paper has had a long history of political and economical sagas connected to the island of Tetopia (now spelled Tanna). During the past three hundred years the Tetopians have been entirely ruled by four kings. The first king was Denichiste, who came to power in 1733. In 1770, a rival king, Vitoamo, killed Denichiste, whereupon Vitoamo became king in 1775. He was deposed by a young Michtye in 18
