Perth. Angels at the Church: The West Australian Church Council is renewing its submission to state government to help it save the historic Sir Charles Hardy buildings in the city of Perth. Steve Haw and Paul Coyne from Sir Charles Hardy with Alison Warburton of Anglicare workmen prepare for the demolition of the site in May 2001. The double tower of the church is on the left. Picture: CHAD O'SHEA

The regional religious group, which raises about $2 million a year for Anglicare WA, has come up with a new plan to secure the site for the city's Anglican diocese. The new proposal is focused on creating a large single church building surrounded by cafes and retailers, and will also allow the old church buildings to remain intact. The East Anglican diocese already owns the former Sir Charles Hardy building in St Georges Terrace. Anglican WA secretary Greg Hollingworth said Anglicare's new plan was "a package of measures and a policy that will hopefully provide us with a good future to work with". "This will help ensure the city of Perth has a modern cathedral to the people of Western Australia." Anglicare approached the City of Perth in March seeking $28 million over 10 years to build a new cathedral and extend or renovate three existing churches including the Sir Charles Hardy building
