Alright so the above was a long post and lead with all the bad news we did not want to spoil the gameplay news coming out next week. Let's be honest- not many betters the gaming community than CSE does. Almost the best. So assuming we are on the same page here, what does "wait until the demo" mean? Do you... mean?! I think so? Basically, the demo might only be playable by several people at once. Sorry for the obscurity but this is hardly "the right thing to say". While worth doing, "wait until the demo comes out" is kinda like saying "wait until the movie comes out"... The demo will be released in a month's time. I'm really interested in seeing the demo, and it wouldn't suck if it gets spoiled for me. I agree with that sentiment, it won't last long enough for any information to be spoiled, it will simply announce it and release it in a month and be done with it. If it is something they've shown off and it is anything but what we thought it was going to be, don't plan on getting much of a reaction or sense of accomplishment. It will have been lifted whole cloth with little regard for the fact that this is a less flashy game that it is. It will have been lifted whole cloth with little regard for the fact that this is a less flashy game that it is. Isn't it awesome to have people this, well, refined for these things though. Perhaps they're not one to be so rude, but they know how to do their job in keeping things secrete and they are extremely talented. They're still building a team for this as we speak and we don't know what they have promised the community for making all the good content they've got and plan on releasing for. I'd love to see the things they have already announced but that video was obviously meant for a closed-door announcing event. I'm more excited about all of this stuff than I've been about

Thu, 27 Apr 2017 22:54:04 +0000>A weekend sale price is a very good idea, but it also comes with a lot of conditions. There is a reason why savers have been advised to take a 50% or even a 75% discount. When thinking of buying a property, the first thing that often pops up in your head is the price, which is like a golden rule for all real estate investment. However, you must first know what the property is worth and how much you can afford to spend. And when it comes to the latter, you have to factor in all the price-related stuff that could benefit you; like the monthly payment, maintenances, maintenance fees, and of course, security deposits. These are the things that most people would never think of but which when added up will definitely help you get a good deal, especially if you consider all the offers that you get to put under bid. You might even find that this is the way where you can build a rich portfolio; take this simple example. You bid on a property that you are planning to invest in. Initially, the price that you have to offer is more than what the property is asking for but it's also far less than what was the going rate. Upon viewing the house, you would
