Structure and dynamics of fluid hydrates in restricted geometry. We report on the determination of molecular structure, dynamics and density of confined water-water and water-ice hydrates by using the THz-TDS technology. Hydrates confined in a rectangular capillary tube show a similar behavior of bulk materials, but with different values of the longitudinal peak frequency and intensity. The shape of hydrate clusters changes significantly with temperature, due to the different dynamics and dynamics structure of the bulk at different temperatures. The most important differences between confined and bulk systems are the density, the values of the angle between the direction of wave propagation and the axis of the tube, the wave polar angle, as well as the ratio of the position of the peak frequency and the value of intensity.
