Coal: The World War One Battle that Turned Australian History While his mates were overseas fighting in the Great War, an Army Ordnance Corps private was amongst the finest commanders of men in the Australian Imperial Force. At the height of the Gallipoli campaign he had commanded the best gun squad in the AIF and was the highest-ranking officer ever to be awarded the VC. He earned the award for an action in which he fired at least two rounds from two captured German machineguns, one that had been set up to sweep the landing place of the AIF troops. This story of one officer and his courageous men on the battlefield is the untold story of the battle that shaped

Australia's future.Q: Optimize login system with Session to SQL Server. Help I have a database on SQL Server that stores a session variable on the user. After logging in, the user sees a table with details about his specific session. Now my question is: how do I optimise the database that way? My approach is to store the entries of the session (the session will contain: Date, DateOfSession, IP-Address, UserName, UserID and LoginTime). A Session is created when the user logs in, and is deleted when the session expires. So I already have a table that stores the information about the session. Then, when a user logs in, the database should look like: Date |

DateOfSession | IP-Address | UserName | UserID | LoginTime 1-1-2010 | 2-3-2010 | 1.1.1.1 | user1 | User1 | 1:1:1 As you can see, I just store the IP-Address, UserName, UserID and LoginTime. (Maybe date could be added, but I don't think this is a big deal.) When I'll need some details about the session, I can look it up by UserID. I have to do this only once

About Twinlight:

Twinlight is a franchise of RPGs developed and owned by GameSage and developed by sgpromise with the cooperation of Imcworld. The game emphasizes on the one of its main features, PvP (player vs. player). Through the collaboration of GameSage and Imcworld, the team have worked up to set up the game based on Twinlight's original design through the visual expression of a grand fantasy and the effort to have the level of gameplay that includes PvP; the high fantasy endless RPG. The game was released in mid-October, 2019 on the Google Play Store.In the developer's judgment, retail users may be atypically cautious to adventure in the cyber world. In consideration of the common use of smart devices, we have decided to make the game available on Google Play.

Overview The Lands Between is home to three castes of people: - The Elden lords, who live in Tarnished. - The Redknights, who live in Flame. - The Grayfolk, who live in the Wasted Plains. There, they are enthralled by the Elden Ring, which is in a state of decline because of war with the other two castes. As an Elden lord, the player takes on the role of a newly-formed member of one of the Elden lords who leads others and constructs a castle. In cooperation with the other members, the player guides the other members towards a new future that is happy and prosperous. At the same time, the player must have their own life, and be present in a world where the castes differ. System Players: - The player takes on the role of one of the three castes, which includes one male character. - The player's gender and appearance are customizable, as is the name of the character (a name unrelated to the player's name). - The player controls a party of characters, and can decide their relationship with the characters. - Alternatively, a hero and a devil can be chosen as the main characters, and party members are available. Camera: - The camera angle can be set freely from the viewfinder. - The player can freely move the camera, and can rotate the camera freely.

Character Graphics: - Each character can be created to their liking. - After creation, the player can freely make changes to the appearance of the character, clothing, hairstyle, and hairstyle. - The appearance of a character can be customized freely, depending on the way the character is made. - The character's gender is determined by the name of the character. Campaign: - There are numerous story events in the story mode as well as the story mode. - The story is told in a multilayered way, with the player playing as different characters to experience the story in a different way. - In the story mode, a variety of events happen as the story unfolds. - Players progress through the story as they experience these events. - Players can choose to spend time practicing on the character creation menu. - Players can check progress and save games. Diversions: - Diversions are side quests in which the player acts on their own. -

In terms of technology, Dakara is a complete user environment that provides virtually everything a virtual world offers, but which is delivered via a web browser. Dakara is both an online server and client based on HTML5, Java and JavaScript. It makes use of several open-source tools, including modern web technologies, such as AJAX, HTML5, CSS and JavaScript, as well as many libraries, such as jQuery, as well as web standards, including HTML5 and CSS3. Dakara is a full-featured WYSIWYG editor with a RESTful API. You can publish directly to the servers, making Dakara a virtual server where you can control your content and user experience, or choose to publish an unedited file which will be uploaded to the server and published to the world using an "external publishing" mechanism. Dakara is built in a modular architecture, where some features are built-in to the main layout that includes a timeline and others are optional, to extend the system and its features. The core application is written in Java. It uses a very simple object-oriented database system. All the components can be modified and extended, with API-compatible interfaces and a plugin architecture that provides for the

1. Field of the Invention This invention relates to an apparatus and method for collecting tags or labels used in the papermaking process. 2. Description of the Related Art In a typical commercial process for the production of tissue, a liquid slurry of pulp fibers is discharged from a headbox and flows down on a moving screen having openings which drain the excess liquid from the pulp fibers. The fibers are removed from the screen by a shoe press mechanism and are then deposited on a moving vacuum belt, typically referred to as a Fourdrinier wire or as a forming wire. While still in its bottom portion, the wire is moved by a laterally moving elevator or other devices that return the pulp fibers to its first position at the headbox. The pulp fibers are then directed upward from the wire and onto the forming surface of a forming fabric, before being directed downward onto the fourthdrige wire to produce a dry sheet of paper. The forming wire, being generally flat, has a very fine wire screen top surface having openings of varying diameters. The openings at the surface of the forming wire are generally open to be open at the top of the forming wire and are closed to be closed at the bottom of the forming wire. By having this configuration, the openings are closed during the back pressure travels of the paper sheet to restrict and assure collection of relatively small and relatively large particles from the pulp fibers. Typically, the pulp fibers supplied to the wire surface of the forming fabric are so displaced or transported to the wire, that the largest and smallest particles will be forced through and collected at the top of the forming wire. The pulp fibers collected at the top of the forming wire are then directed onto a breast roll which is coupled with a suction device. The suction device removes the excess liquid from the collected pulp fibers allowing the still wet fibers to be directed down onto the surface of a moving creped tissue sheet. After the final transfer of the fibrous material onto the moving tissue sheet, the tissue web is cre
