At the request of the player who really wants to live in order to be happy, I will be taking on the problem of creating a world where the pain of life is present. With Etchings of Life and Time by the name of Etchings of the Elden, I will be constructing a world that is rich with deep themes. Rinse. The ground of the land's surface and the energy that flows through the land will be changing, similar to the original Etchings of Life and Time. Slowly, the entire world is developing new changes. Who are these changes? What are they going to be like? I am powerless to stop it, but I will try my best to live well. For this, I must ask you, the people who love Etchings of the Elden, to give your support. I will do my utmost to create an enjoyable game with a compelling story that you can experience in a world where life and death are the same. I appeal to you to give your support.

The dice is rolling! The player who rolls the highest number at the end of a turn takes control of that area. In the case of a tie, the area will be split, with half belonging to each player. Successful hits to HP will result in that character instantly losing HP. In the case of a critical hit, the character will lose 3 HP instead of 1. Characters also lose health with each hit to the Healing system. Let's check the conditions of every character's life. The character being attacked takes damage: Attacks are defined by numbers corresponding to characters, as shown in the chart. Character weight is listed as "100 + Number." Characters without weight will also take the Attack 1 damage. Note that ATK is included in the Attack column. You can use magic to heal HP. Magic costs are listed under the HP box. Similarly, characters can use various status boosts. The number of boosts is listed under the HP box. This means that characters don't always have to rely on the healing potions obtained through the questing system; they can also use the charms from the Vouchers box. A character's defense depends on their Defense attribute. Defenses are listed by combining the number next to the Defense attribute with "DEX + Resistance + RT

When it comes to foreign policy, it is time for, well, at least some thinking out loud. The United States has been talking to the Taliban for a decade and a half. It's time for us to make it clear to them what we want from them. The most important thing we want them to do is to stop the killing of Afghan civilians, stop the smuggling of narcotics, and stop the targeting of American service members. Without a concerted strategy to simultaneously combine American ground and air forces with an Afghan counterinsurgency strategy to break the Taliban's grip on villages and towns, we will not be able to liberate the country, and in my estimation that will happen no sooner than two years from now.
