Your creators are the same people that made you, and you'll likely never know much of the purpose of your existence. You can choose your name, but it's unlikely you will ever do so, and you won't care for it if you do. You have the ability to think, not much more than that. You'll find that there is nothing so valuable in this world that cannot be replaced. There are plenty of other yous out there, why keep you alive? Role Playing Game Bonus Content: Every time you start a new game, all of the previous stories and events of that character, create a new back story for you. You will never be used up. As Leif, you've been created with such core values that define your life and what matters, which is why you can never be destroyed. However, every now and again you'll question your creator's motivations. They may not have been working to destroy you for your own sake, but to destroy all other yous. What if every other you out there was destroyed? Have you seen a house in Vietnam this evening? Environment Art and Development Help Playtesters: Vivian Lang, Brooke Jarvis, & Ryan Hogg Audio Credits: Keith Harrison & Brooke Jarvis #1 Non-sports game I've created in I wanted to build a video game based on my experiences during Vietnam, and I still remember the night I almost died. I turned my head at the last moment to avoid a bullet, which was about 25 of an inch away from the side of my head. Can you be friends with yourself? Most people couldn't, but you can. You might think that this is just "glorified stealth game". That's fine, but you should play it anyway, a version for consoles as well. See for yourself.Q: Why do many "jungle" island flags say "Jungle"? The flag of the island of Malta for example, does not show any of the traditional Maltese crosses, but instead a large vuvalu (a spinning top made of rope), which appears on the Maltese flag. In a book published in the 1800s, I read that originally the Maltese had been part of the Roman Empire. One of the first rulers of Malta was Marcus Aurelius, and some records state that the settlers of Malta believed that the islands had been under the Romans for at least a hundred years, before they were actually conquered by the Greeks. It was common in medieval times for rulers and generals to name their kingdoms after themselves, and they were supposed to have special privileges that distinguished them from others. In the 17th century, one of the supporters of the Vassal of Gozo, and Defender of the Faith, Robert Fitzgerald, gave the people of Gozo some free time to express their gratitude to him. In his will, he left money to the people of Gozo to fund a festival of thanksgiving to God for helping him defeat the Vassal. It is said that the Gozitan people chose to name the festival after the man who helped them in their battle against the Vassal, and hence the name 'Gozo Festival' was born. A few years later, Gozo's King George (a cousin of the man whose name gave the festival its

Nights Neon: Eternal Nights is a comic book series from Greg Rucka and Skottie Young, created in 1997. The series follows a musician named Neon and an American college student named Hotshot, after they meet in their punk rock band, and the two of them work together to catch a serial killer dubbed the "Golden One". The series is noted for its genre-defying approach, which consists of a mode of storytelling where none exist. The series is notable for its experimental tone and style, something that Young wanted to experiment with. The series was partly funded by a grant from the National Endowment for the Arts. When NEA funding ended Young looked for a way to continue the series himself by teaming up with Rucka, and having them solve "puzzle" cases together. The series has also been compared to the work of Daniel Clowes and Alan Moore, and in turn received comparisons with the work of Grant Morrison. Rucka has said, he and Young were "interested in the model of the detective story... but to put that story up on the page and try to make it visual, or try to make it in any way reflective of an audio-visual experience of a narrative. [W]e were inspired by the street novelists, Kerouac, Burroughs, Russ Meyer. So it was almost like that idea of the detective story on its head and put him in a surveillance environment and he's searching for this girl who may or may not be a serial killer, but he may look like a serial killer himself and see if he catches her." Plot Neon: Eternal Nights is a neo-noir mystery comic. Neon and her partner Hotshot are punk-rock musicians. Neon writes a song about Hotshot that takes on a romantic tone, which he claims is intended to express his love for her. But in reality, Hotshot is secretly a serial killer who secretly despises Neon for talking about him so honestly. This is revealed when Hotshot kills a bully and then sings this song about Neon's mistake of believing him. He serenades her from a nearby rooftop, and she subsequently ends their relationship. Neon's sister receives a letter from Neon criticizing her previous boyfriend, so she uses this to reach Hotshot when he tries to kill her. Neon and Hotshot subsequently collaborate on a mission to stop a serial killer who's using a remote-controlled shark to kill a teenage prostitute and the pursuing
