To evaluate the efficacy and toxicity of infusional 5-fluorouracil (FU), folinic acid (FA), and cisplatin (FAP) therapy for patients with locally advanced nasopharyngeal carcinoma (NPC). Thirty-seven patients with stage IIB-IVA, undifferentiated, nonmetastatic, NPC were treated with a regimen of infusional FU, FA, and cisplatin every 3 weeks. Complete response (CR), partial response (PR), stable disease (SD), and progressive disease (PD) occurred in 3, 5, 3, and 8% of patients, respectively. With a median follow-up of 28 months (range, 6-45 months), the 3-year overall survival (OS) and progression-free survival (PFS) rates were 72 and 46%, respectively. Univariate analysis indicated that patients with advanced T-classification, lack of response to cisplatin, and lack of response to induction chemotherapy had lower OS and PFS rates. However, multivariate analysis revealed that advanced T-classification and lack of response to induction chemotherapy were the only independent predictors of decreased OS and PFS. Thirteen (36%) patients were able to receive a total dose of at least 80% of the planned FU and cisplatin. FAP chemotherapy for patients with locally advanced NPC appears to be an effective and tolerable regimen. Advanced T-classification and lack of response to induction chemotherapy were the only independent predictors of OS and PFS.[Progress in the genetic analysis of children with dyslexia].
