The low-cost carrier grounded its Pride Air W52 carrying 30 passengers from Houston to Raleigh late on Sunday afternoon due to "technical issues," adding that the plane would not be allowed to fly until further notice. Just after 3:30 p.m. CT, Pride Air released a statement saying the flight originated at Bush Intercontinental Airport in Houston and was scheduled to land at RDU Airport in Durham, North Carolina, at 3:30 p.m. CT. According to a flight tracker, the plane landed in Houston on schedule at 2:30 p.m. CT. Several minutes after landing, a message posted on the plane's official Facebook page said the plane would not be allowed to take off until further notice. The plane eventually departed from the terminal and continued its flight to RDU. Pride Air also released a statement in which it said that the airline was not certain of the reason for the grounding of the plane and that it was trying to determine the exact cause. "
