Aggregation kinetics of hydrolyzed whey protein powder and the effect of hydrogen peroxide-induced oxidation. Free radicals have been shown to induce protein oxidation in whey powder. In this study, the effect of a chemical oxidation process to suppress aggregation of oxidized whey protein was studied and compared to that of thermal oxidation. Wheat or casein protein was subjected to hydrogen peroxide-induced oxidation prior to preparation of powder. Reduced SH content and free SH groups were determined in both powders. Hydrogen peroxide-induced oxidation to either wheat or casein protein led to a significant decrease in aggregation rate of both powders at all storage temperatures as measured by isothermal microcalorimetry. However, less aggregation was observed in the thermally oxidized whey protein powder than in casein protein, indicating a possible selective effect of the protein oxidation process. It was also observed that storage temperature accelerated aggregation in both types of oxidized protein powders. A greater effect of storage temperature was observed in the oxidized casein powder. I met a fisherman when walking on the east shore of Helsinki. In the early-morning of the same day I had a rendezvous with a man, who had been dead for a while, leading a horse cross the moon in northern Finland.

Two more dead men, one of them a madman, led me. A schoolteacher (dead) guided me. I am here in time to watch a fire of vanished time. The dogs guide me -- God knows where they are now.

The struggle of dusting written messages underground is called "stair-unfollowing". I carry a toolbox with a "cat's tail" in it, and in the basement of the stadium I kept a robot meepe which fed out wafer "cats' tail" wires along the ceiling.

On the way, a sheriff's dog bit me, and I immediately ceased all dustnet-related works. "Cat's Tail" wires loosened and caused immeasurable nervous damage under the police headquarters.

In the fortress in Kastelholmet in Helsinki, where the priests were killed after the revolution, the nails from my toolbox caused such irreversible damage to the main door and the one leaving the fortress that they had to be removed and explained to the new owners of the fortress (they were a mining company).

The building was built in the same lot as the machine-gun section of the previous fortress. A year earlier three railway workers, one of them a sawmill labourer, were killed by the military authorities in the same fortress. The gunman said he "didn't know where the murder

The hormonal reprogramming of pre-cancerous breast cells into cancer cells. Cells derive from the same progenitors early on during development. Early events of cancerous development are mirrored in early developmental events. In contrast to the widely held view that the tumor is a de novo genetic aberration or a mutant clone derived from a small number of stem cells, it has recently become clear that the vast majority of cancer cells are descendant from tissue-specific progenitor cells. During early development, the polarized mammary epithelium gives rise to a small number of progenitor cells through a series of lineage restricted intermediate states that are hierarchically organized into luminal and basal cell
