There are a bunch of sites that claim to have an SSL certificate that will work for all browsers. I need one that will work for all browsers. There are a few that do this, but I'd like to know how they do it. Is it just.pem files? I don't want to get one from a 'certificate authority' (CA). A: From Wikipedia In 1989, Thomas W. Lavalley, then a researcher at the University of Delaware in Newark, took part in the first public demonstration of broken SSL. He presented it at DEFCON 22 and explained how SSL servers can be compromised. This demonstration included a Java application that presented a fake site to public browsers; the Java application was designed using Netscape Enterprise Server. All browsers were fooled, which Lavalley attributed to an implementation bug in SSL. The vulnerability was fixed in Netscape Navigator 3.02 From What is an SSL Certificate: An SSL certificate is composed of a public key and chain of trust consisting of certificates identifying the issuing CA, any intermediate CA that issued certificates and the subject of the certificate. The major browsers validate the public key with the CA before accepting the certificate. The certificate chain is used to authenticate the identity of the entity that is identified by the public key and to verify that they are in possession of the private key that corresponds to the public key. If you have a certificate from GoDaddy, I think you will be able to use it in whatever browser you choose
