is an application that enables you to control your sound with your mouse and if you like it, it's completely free developers can turn it into a fully-featured desktop or status application minimal download size zero unwanted features Windows and Mac OS X versions of the application available it is very easy to configure and install pictures screenshots readme file statistics What's in this version: 2.00 released on 09/17/2019 Price: Free Resume: no Installation Size: 56.63 MB (703,571 bytes) Operating Systems: Windows (7, 8, 8.1, 10), Mac (10.0 or later) A standard keyboard is only fitted with common buttons and no extra controls. Some are specialized in multimedia, with dedicated buttons for playback and volume, to easily add or cut off some decibels. On ease of access, applications like WheelsOfVolume want to make it easy for you to adjust system volume simply by using the mouse wheel. Stays hidden until used For the application to properly work, it needs to to be able to connect to the part of the system responsible for sound delivery. A simple, quick installation process takes care of this task, and you're asked whether or not to start the application when it's done. There's no main window, so don't expect anything to pop on your desktop. By default, the application hides in the system tray, but there's an option that makes sure it only runs as a service, without taking up any visual space at all. This isn't an issue, considering the tray icon only provides options to start or stop the service, and decide whether or not you want the application to start along with Windows. As the name suggests, the main function gives you the possibility to control system volume by scrolling. Only triggered from the desktop Doing so displays a progress indicator on your desktop, just so you know the level, and if it can be increased even more. Unfortunately, there's only the default style, with no customization options whatsoever. What's more, this function can only be triggered if the desktop is the active space, because using the mouse wheel over any other area has no effect other than the default area function

Isn't it annoying to have to get up and drag the slider with your mouse in order to raise the sound level, when you could just use the wheel of your mouse wheel? WheelsOfVolume is an application which helps you to solve this problem. By using the wheel of your mouse, it is easy to adjust the volume of your system, without having to leave your desktop. How does it work? WheelsOfVolume can be started simply by using the mouse wheel. For this to work, there must be a window on the desktop in the same place as the wheel. As soon as you start scrolling, a progress bar will appear on the desktop, showing how much volume you can raise, and how much you still can increase it. The speed of the wheel can be chosen by the user. By default, the application keeps the speed at a constant value, but you can go for a faster, or slower rate, to give you a better control over the sound level. Once you are done, or if there's a mouse button pressed, WheelsOfVolume will disappear, and a normal sound volume level indicator will be displayed. How to install WheelsOfVolume? • Works with Windows OS[Bone densitometry of femur, L-4 and L-5 in children and young adults with type 1 and type 2 diabetes mellitus and the effect of corticosteroids]. Distribution of bone mineral density (BMD) was studied in a group of 31 patients with type 1 diabetes mellitus (DM I) and in a group of 26 patients with type 2 DM (DM II) as well as in 17 patients with insulin-dependent DM (type I) and in 21 patients with non-insulin dependent DM (type II). The material comprised determinations of BMD of the proximal epiphysis of the femur and the L4-L5 vertibrae in all the patients. The results of BMD in DM I were comparable to the values recorded in the group of healthy children and in the same age group of children with insulin-dependent DM. In DM II and in adults with insulin-dependent DM however BMD was higher, even in a subgroup of 30-39 year old patients. In the DM I and in the DM II group the results of BMD were similar to the values in adults with insulin-dependent DM in L-4 and L-5, while in the DM II patients the values of BMD in L-4 and L-5 were lower. In all the groups studied the BMD of the femur was higher than the mean BMD recorded in the healthy children, with the exception of patients with DM II. Patients with cortisone therapy showed normal values of BMD, while patients without the drug, irrespective of the diabetic status, showed significantly lower values of BMD than the healthy adults. The results of BMD and the role of glucocorticosteroid therapy in the establishment of osteopenia in adult and child patients with type I diabetes mellitus have been discussed.Q: Click event handler is being called twice when passing through an if statement I have a bit of strange behavior that I am not understanding. I am trying to have a click event handler run only if the if statement is true. In order to accomplish this, I am using an else statement and just passing in the event handler. This is what I have: var test = false; function handleClick(e) { if (test) {
