Dallas, TX residents should know that they have both state and federal constitutional rights against warrantless searches, and for that reason, a police officer must have either a court order or probable cause before conducting a search. Although Dallas Police Department may have constitutional authorization to conduct an illegal search, for this reason, individuals who have been arrested are strongly advised to retain the aid of legal counsel. Our attorneys have decades of experience providing clients with high-quality representation at a reasonable cost. Although local attorneys can provide representation free of charge, we charge just enough to cover the cost of our time and efforts on your behalf. Call us today at (214) 460-2800 to speak with one of our criminal defense lawyers in Dallas, TX. How Much Does It Cost

Q: Getting list of all files in a directory I have a directory and a text file with a list of files in it. All of the files have some common prefix in their name. How can I get a list of all of the files in this directory and its subdirectories?

Thanks! A: 1) Using the find command (assuming your files' filenames have the prefix "foo"): find. -name 'foo*' Note that the spaces will be part of the output, so if you want to remove them, you can use the -print0 option to find: find. -name 'foo*' -print0 2) Using the ls command (if you're on a GNU/Linux system, and you have the coreutils package): ls -l .foo On a BSD system, use: ls .foo 3) Using the bash builtin glob builtin (requires bash 3.x or greater, eg version 4.3 or greater): shopt -s globstar For example: echo foo pax$ echo foo pax$ ls .foo pax$ 4) Using the "graphical" file selector: If you have X installed, then it's easy to use the X file selector: clicking on All files (unless you have only single file names). Click on the + button to start typing (or just wait long enough for the panel to auto-fill). After you've selected all the files you want, press OK. If you don't have X, you can use the file selector on your desktop (linux desktops or mac desktops). Q: How do I differentiate between a metric and an element of a metric space? I'm going through Bishop's text on metric spaces and have reached his section in the definition of distance between metric spaces, d , where he says: "... d is defined on metric spaces, but we use the notation d when we mean simply the distance between two points of a metric space." I understand the reasons 0cc13bf012
