Sarwate, India - In 2015, a pretty, young 18-year-old came to Fauji Ram Zarar Ahmed Hafizabad's practice. She was obviously new to the dentist's chair, and, without being able to say much with her teeth, her story was easy to sympathise with. She told him that she was unable to eat or drink properly and didn't feel right. Her mother had been treating her with a tooth paste, but it wasn't working. Hafizabad, a young dentist in the small town of Sarwate in the state of Rajasthan, India, examined her, and saw that she had a problem with her wisdom teeth. The surgery went well and she came out from the hospital with a glowing smile. But when she attempted to eat, she discovered that she couldn't. "I couldn't get any food out because there was this thick layer of bone blocking my food pipe," she told Al Jazeera. "My mother had to feed me bread because that was the only thing she could get in my mouth. That is when we knew that we had to find a solution to the problem and get it fixed." Hafizabad, 32, and his dentist colleague, Syed Saiful, 34, decided to work on what they believe is one of the last few remaining "growth obstructive dental problems", in an attempt to eliminate "flooding the market with medical miracles". Growth-obstructive dental problems are uncommon and often lead to cavities that cannot be treated. Until recently, the only remedy was root canal surgery, but the practice has fallen out of fashion and dentists who specialise in dental healthcare are in short supply.

Desperate for a solution, Hafizabad and Saiful began working on the problem. "For years, I have been doing root canals and other dental procedures. Whenever I encounter a patient who is suffering from a growth obstructive condition,

Здравствуйте! This Game Is Dead is a funny free-roaming RPG, similar to the style of the old school NES games. It's based off of the popular 2D beat 'em up, Geometry Wars, which is where I get a lot of inspiration from. This game's premise is simple: You're a dead badass space ranger named deadspace ranger. When someone arrives and asks you to rescue their princess, you can't help but answer with a resounding "No!". For most of the game, you will fight c9d1549cdd

On Life's Lessons To Help Your Cat From The Cat Litter To Ace Bathing I remember the day my most beloved cat stepped into the kitchen tub in Vancouver. I was as happy as a kid in a cartoon watching kitty grow up before my eyes. I was captivated by the expression on her face that said she was so delighted to be human. She was so proud and free. For a few years I raised her, her sister and the litter that was cuddling beside the tub. I was part-time cat lady. I remember I was at home one day and I saw her attempting to play with the cute little kittens who wanted to tuck themselves into her tub — they loved being human, too. And she was rolling in it. It was like cat play-dough, and there was a long, growing pile of it that wasn't going to last long. My brain started to swirl with what I was going to do. I couldn't stand the thought of letting her eat the baby mice she wanted to swallow (she ate the turtles, well, she was a chewer) and she also liked watching the kittens play around. So I took a deep breath and saved the kittens from their plight. It wasn't pretty and I had to open doors and boxes to get them all out. All the while the cats circled me and watched the process with curious interest. A little clip to open the mouths of the pretty little ones. The frantic sucking and gasping noises as I opened their tiny throats to let go of the furry-toy-like food. And the perky little kills on the mothers who couldn't care less. Yeah, I was a badass, an Urban Cat rescuer. I was a cat lady and I was proud. In her innocent way, Mia was being a cat. She was getting a taste of life. She was going to learn. Learning is an amazing way to live life. And she was learning a lot of things fast. The hardest thing was getting her to bathe. I tried everything, all the torturous ways to forcibly bathe a cat (trust me you have that kind of crazy face your over). But Mia was just too heavy for me. She'd come out from under the kitchen table and want me to feed her and didn't want to do it. And you think you're home. Yummy! But she kept trying. She'd play with a litter box right under our feet, wanting
