thioureas via single-component carbamothioylation. Chemical thiourea synthesis under conditions of low nucleophilicity is a notoriously difficult task. While classically a pathway is used requiring the presence of weakly basic isocyanides, many strong nucleophiles, such as those containing sulfur, are also weak bases, and accordingly, thiourea formation is more facile.

However, this facile reaction pathway has not been widely utilized because, until recently, its use required a very reactive transition metal catalyst. This drawback was overcome with the recent discovery that, for example, carbamothioyl chloride is quite stable and, furthermore, it may be used in the synthesis of carbamothioureas even in the absence of a transition metal catalyst. This protocol is a first example of a method for the selective synthesis of thioureas via a direct reaction between an amine and an isocyanide.¹

Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a liquid ejecting head that ejects liquid, and more particularly, to a liquid ejecting head that ejects liquid onto a medium, such as paper or a sheet of cloth, from nozzles as a plurality of ejection openings. 2. Description of the Related Art A well-known liquid ejecting apparatus ejects liquid from a liquid ejecting head having a plurality of nozzles. In such an apparatus, for example, the liquid ejecting head can be installed in an image recording apparatus, such as a printer or a copier, that records images and texts. Japanese Patent Application Laid-Open No. 2006-225222 describes a liquid ejecting head that ejects ink from a plurality of ejection openings formed therein. In the conventional art described in Japanese Patent Application Laid-Open No. 2006-225222, ejection orifices formed between a plurality of nozzle plates (liquid ejecting heads) are partially clogged with residual ink or
