What's New in the VSubst?

It is not a must but you can use it as a way to show the various options of the application to othersQ: MS Project - How to exclude a column from iteration? I'm using MS Project to manage a project. This is the first time I use it, so I'm new to the system. I have a schedule with three phases (say 1, 2 and 3). Each phase has eight tasks per workday. I want to use iteration on this schedule to be able to see the distribution of the tasks on the days during the whole project. I have a problem with phases 1 and 3. I've read that it's possible to use the filter criteria to exclude a column from an iteration, but I can't find an answer. In fact, I can't even find a place where I could input some data. All I can see is that in the option Properties > Iteration Options > General > Filter Criteria > Select column/s to exclude, there is no option to exclude a column. And yes, I don't want to use a virtual column. A: I've got the answer. It's using the "Default filter type" option in the start or end of a Phase. To have a custom filter type, you have to go to the Option tab in the beginning and then select "Edit a start or end of a period" Welcome to the Fantasy Football Breaking News Forum where you can discuss solutions, get help or ask questions. Here's a small sample of the topics covered. The full Forum has more than 300,000 registered members. Is Sidney Rice a viable Fantasy option this week? Sidney Rice has 23 catches on 31 targets for 283 yards and a touchdown in his last four games. He's a very reasonable RB2 option this week. Sidney Rice has 23 catches on 31 targets for 283 yards and a touchdown in his last four games. He's a very reasonable RB2 option this week. In my opinion he is, sometimes I consider him a low end TE, don't get me wrong, I love Rice, just his match up this week and in general doesn't affect my decision, my RB1 is PPR still, but I'm not the guru that I used to be. Sidney Rice has 23 catches on 31 targets for 283 yards and a touchdown in his last four games. He's a very reasonable RB2 option
