If yes, how to do that? I want to know this because i need to use javascript to test my website. I have tried: self.window.location.href=''; but the result that i get is that the body changes size to the size of the window. Thanks, A: No, it is not possible in modern browsers. But the window object represents the browser's window object, you could use window.opener to switch into the currently active window. Be careful when doing so though, window.opener could point to anything. Example var top = window.top; // points to the currently active window var myWindow = window.opener; // points to the window that originally called window.opener myWindow.document.write('hello'); // Will print in the window af5dca3d97
