One thing's for sure, we're going to be adding one of those security holograms and these have been asked many times! From our view, this is a little too far, it's also non-standard to be honest - but we will answer this soon! We will have a simple but secure "one-click install" next week to check this out. Thanks for all the feedback guys, we really appreciate it, now don't forget to fire up one of our plugins in the meantime and keep on trucking! (Unnecessary, this comment was above their limit, but it's just my 2 cents on what I thought they should do) Sr Surrman You may or may not be aware of how easy it is to install an add-on that simply will not work with your plugins. This is normal, and even if you do change the default folder to a different folder, they will still not work, and you will be stuck with an unusable plugin. I have had to reinstall my Phaser Audio Cleaner 5 many times to make them work. They were always installed on my desktop or on my "office files" folder, while on a clean computer, they would not work. So I have moved the code for my software to another folder, and they have now worked. So, if you know what you are doing, you can move the folder where your plugin's code is, and you will not have a problem, but if you don't, just move your folder out of the default folder, or if you do not have a folder in the default folder, just move the code folder, and you should be golden. You don't need to do anything fancy, just move out the default folder where VSTs are installed and will be seen when opening VSThost, or move the folder to where you would normally put your plugins. I am tired of your plugin automatically uninstalling itself. I am not installing from web plugin repository, i'm using original internet location. You don't want me to download this or that plugin for linux and then deal with all the half installed plugins. If your plugin will try to remove itself by some internal process of functionality even without the user being present. it will be very hard to get this specific plugin back again, as the user will have to start the re-install process of the plugin, but more than this, the plugin will
