The authors report a case of a triple angioma involving the lower eyelids (lacrimar, ciliary, and palpebral). The lacrimar vessel was situated in the frontociliary region, whereas the ciliary and palpebral vessels invaded the tarsal conjunctiva and the upper eyelid, respectively. The ciliary angioma involved the cornea and had been present since birth. Atrophy of the lacrimar nevus resulted in facial skin hyperpigmentation. The management of these multiple angiomas is sometimes difficult. Although extraocular growth of the ciliary angioma was an aggressive feature, the conjunctival angioma is more difficult to treat and the prognosis depends on the location of this vascular abnormality. The authors report a case of a papillomatous ciliary angioma complicated by squamous cell carcinoma. Guest post by Joe Hoft The Washington Post (WaPo) has a very sad story.
