Vasantha Maligai - Six Equal Partners, Sivaji Ganesan -.The present invention relates to an electronic health record system for collecting and collecting patient information and health information. In the recent years, medical information systems have been introduced and many hospitals and doctors' offices are now equipped with them, because they are useful for medical care and are advantageous in making records. Generally, however, a medical information system is indispensable for specific applications and is not practical for all hospitals and doctors' offices. There are two kinds of basic requirements for medical information systems. One is a system used only by a few hospitals and doctors, and the other is a system applied to hospitals and doctors in the whole country, including the US. The former is needed only in a limited field of information, but the latter is not only a requirement for further introduction in the whole country but also important for business as well as for the standardization of medical care in the whole country. A display apparatus used in a general hospital has a basic function of confirming whether a medical care is proper. Namely, the display apparatus displays a limited range of information, including a past history of a patient, a past history of a treatment, a laboratory test result, a family history, the name of a specialist, drugs that have been prescribed and the like. A copy apparatus of the display apparatus functions to produce a copy of a recording of a patient, a document, a medical record or the like. For such a display apparatus and copy apparatus, Japanese Patent Laid-Open Publication No. 253568/1991 discloses a structure in which, by using information from a computer as a master, a display apparatus is connected to a computer through a communication line and operable independently of the computer. Japanese Patent Laid-Open Publication No. 247997/1992 discloses a structure in which an apparatus for collecting medical records and an apparatus for 6d1f23a050
