Royal Caribbean
International I had never realized there was this much preparation required to get out of the Adriatic.

But, of course, there is.

The captain. The captain is always the first person off, followed by all the stewards, then one by one the guests and then after all that the crew. From the sixth floor of a nearby Milan hotel, if you glance up and towards the back of the boat, you will see it coming. She is the floating glue that binds an eventful but difficult journey together. It's not just that the captain's job is to steer the ship, but the captain is also the ambassador. The ambassador for what we will be told later is an ocean of dreams and fantasies. The ambassador for a land without limits and a port without a pier. The ambassador for an adventure that starts here, lasts a few minutes, and is then over. Never to be remembered. The captain is the messenger to the passengers, but from the first moment, the captain is also the only judge in the room. Our first introduction to the captain of the Vista Pacifica was not to get what our expectations were, nor to worry that we were getting what we wanted. The captain's role was to sell the boat, to think on our behalf and to represent us in terms we could understand and appreciate. So the captain tells us that today is a very special day. It is probably the most important day in the entire history of the ship, and what will be happening is not just a cruise, but a complete experience. He explains that the ship can be divided into five boxes, each box is associated with a specific area of the ship. On the top deck there is a special lounge called the Vista Dining Room. It is a special place, designed specifically to celebrate life at sea and to start us off on the right foot. On top of the deck, there is also a special water park that starts on the edge of the dining room and extends down into the water.

The dining room overlooks a lookout deck and the water park. The next stop is the top deck, where we can sip a coffee or have a glass of wine as the ship cruises through the port and we can look out over the wake from the ship's bow and the city coming up behind us.

There is also a special area for a very select few near the top deck called the Vista Sky Bar and behind that is our Vista Theater.

There are also the
