In go, we can use package main.go like below. `main.go: package main func main() { println(os.Getenv("GOARCH")) } $ go run main.go ./main.go:5: imported and not used: "os" ./main.go:5: undefined: Getenv` I don't want to export runtime.main because I want to use it in production servers. Is there any way that I can use this? A: Do you want to import runtime.main? It is part of the standard library. If so, just import it: `package main import ("os" "os/signal" "syscall" "runtime") func main() { signal.Notify(syscall.SIGWINCH, syscall.SIGWINCH) }` Q: Oracle SQL: How to update a row but only for a particular column? I would like to update a few columns of a row, but only for a specific table. I don't want to touch the table, just a particular column in that table. How do you do this? A: This command will do the trick: `update table set column = column_value where table_id = 123` and column_value is null You can use VALUE instead of the = operator if you want to override a column value. A: `update a_table set col_name=`
