A: It's in the second column.

You can use the KEYfool plugin in the Gimp to see what all of the numbers are, I am sure there's no need to not just guess which ones you have to change! Q: Add dynamic content to many divs at once I am wondering if there is a way to 'drag and drop' divs in to a certain area without having to go back and forth, from a page where they are defined to a list of where you want them to go. As a simple example, I have 3 divs already set up, with different sizes: this is dynamic Now, I want to create a list where each of these divs are put into their own div, with the widths being dynamic (as the user can choose different sizes for each of them). I don't want to have to do it all individually (which is what I'm doing now). I was hoping there would be some sort of 'drag and drop' module for adding divs to a certain area, similar to an image editor. Is that possible? A: The main option for this kind of scenario is jQuery UI. It's pretty easy to use and there is a huge library of stuff you can do with it. Q: Swift UITextView force touch I have a custom UITextView, which I want it to force touch when user is reaching the end of the line. I can't seem to make this work. What I have tried to do is run a UILongPressGestureRecognizer on the UITextView. I can tap the UITextView when it is not at the end of the line, but I can't figure out a way to make it force touch when I tap after the line is complete. Any thoughts? - (void) viewDidLoad { [super viewDidLoad]; 6d1f23a050
