In pentobarbital-anesthetized rabbits, we studied the pressure changes produced in small (2-5 microns) central arterial and central venous vessels after the injection of an intravenous bolus of sodium nitroprusside (SNP). In response to this stimulus, arterial vasoconstriction, venoconstriction, and arteriovenous dilation were observed at the central arteriovenous anastomoses in all of the studies. The magnitude of arteriovenous dilation in the central arteriovenous anastomoses was generally much greater than the equivalent arterial and venous responses occurring in the peripheral arteriovenous anastomoses. The magnitude of these dissociated vascular responses decreased rapidly after the injection of SNP, but disappeared more slowly and less completely in peripheral than in central arteriovenous anastomoses. Dissociated vascular responses appear to be mediated by pressure release from the central anastomotic resistance vessels.One of Egypt's most popular young graffiti artists has died in an accident on his way home from a show in Cairo, local media reports 6d1f23a050
