In September 1998, the 2002 INCOMPAS (Internacional Comunidad de Inteligencia Sanitaria Clínica, Español) held a conference, "Contravigilancia: Forma de protección de la salud," focused on defining an entry-point to the Special Health Service (SSS) by establishing as a first step a base of epidemiological information in the country. Al SSS is an essential component of the Sistema Nacional de Salud (MINSa), and is headed by the Secretaria de Salud (SdS), which includes not only the Epidemiology and Control Institute of the Ministry of Health, but also the department of Information, Medical Statistics and Experimental Therapies (IMEI), the National Institute of Statistics (INEC), the Epidemiology Institute, the National Center of Diagnosis, Notifications and Information of the Microbiology and Parasitology Service (CENMAI) (INE), the Social Security Department, the Department of Medical Coordination of Special Health. The National System of Epidemiological Surveillance (SINAC, acronym in English) is the tool to collect, receive, analyze, store, and disseminate this information, which is consolidated within the CI10.171 (PCI system).
