In one of the many evil ways in which the law allows men to mistreat women, there is an unequal and unfair system where a man can pay to sexually assault a woman and get away with it. I've seen this happen. I was sexually assaulted by a stranger. There was a limousine that picked him up. And he paid some money, probably around $250. Once I found out who he was, I called the police. They investigated, determined it was not a crime, and dropped it. I was paid for a sexual encounter? That's not illegal. Last week, I learned a few things: Even though it happened in a bar, a woman can be raped by her boyfriend. She must assume the risk of that. A woman can be raped by her employer, including a taxi driver, in a van, in a limousine. A woman can be raped by a man she knows. I guess the most important part is this: The law does not recognize rape of women. As a radical feminist, this is an issue that I can't shake out of my head. I am dismayed. I'm sure there are things that make a rape even worse, but I can't imagine any other situation than this where a rape is considered "sexually motivated." Not only is it physically damaging to the woman, but when she is stigmatized by it, it can mean taking away her self-respect. I'm angry. I have a lot of rage because this occurred in a bar. I was too drunk to realize it was going on. I drank and partied, and it was not until I was outside the venue that I realized what happened. I'm hoping that someone out there knows something about this woman in the picture, the so-called "escort" who is being charged.
