the dentist will ask about your diet, and whether you drink a lot of coffee or take aspirin. he'll also ask about any medications you take. the dentist will use a special tool to gently remove the soft parts of your teeth, even the gum line. you may feel a little stinging from the tool, but this is normal. if you feel pain or discomfort anywhere else in your body, you'll let the dentist know. most people only need to have a few teeth cleaned once or twice a year. however, your dentist may suggest more frequent cleaning if you have a lot of plaque buildup on your teeth. this can cause gum disease, which can lead to tooth loss. after your teeth are cleaned, the dentist will apply a special gel or spray that contains fluoride. this helps strengthen the tooth and protect it from decay. the dentist will tell you when to use the gel or spray, and how often. you may want to have your teeth cleaned at home, too, but ask your dentist about this first. many dentists recommend waiting until your teeth are at least two or three years old before cleaning them at home. taking care of your teeth is important for your overall health. your dentist can help you with tips for staying healthy. you'll feel more confident when you know you're doing your best to take care of your teeth. the teeth are the strongest and most obvious elements of human nature and expression. dental radiography is the earliest and probably the most rudimentary means of seeing the exterior of the human body. as such, dentists have used various x-ray machines and techniques in an attempt to get a good picture of the teeth.
