while there are four main ways in which image noise can occur in photography, and eight different forms of noise can be eliminated or reduced through sophisticated image processing techniques, it is not necessary to use all of them. for professional images, that require maximum detail, quality and noise reduction, there are three main areas of focus: the sharpen pro project function, along with all of the functions of the

sharpen pro projects program, are designed to offer you an effective, convenient and easy way to reduce noise in your images. while this noise reduction function is not the only way to reduce noise, it is the most effective. the sharpen pro project function is extremely effective for reducing the effects of noise on your images, even when used on extremely noisy images. as an example, using the sharpen pro project function, even on images with a large amount of noise, you can easily get a much more effective image with the sharpen pro project function than you could by using other noise reduction methods. i think that the sharpen projects program is, however, better suited to images that have already been processed using other software (such as image editing software) than it is to raw images, as they have already undergone a certain amount of processing. i don't know how it can be possible to remove all noise in one pass, but the denoise can do this. it's very powerful. my question is, how can it be possible to remove all noise in one pass, but leave the colors (and especially high contrast) untouched? it's a weird way to work, but it's a good way to work.
