beast server has a very useful feature, the 'ip address of the host' list. so for example, if the host is under a firewall and you cannot access it, the beast server can be used to send an email to the host that beast server is located. so for example, the host may be protected from botnet attacks by a firewall. the host can be protected from being contacted by the hacker by the beast server. the host can also be protected from virus by the beast server. the ip addresses of the host can be given in the beast server as a list. ip addresses of the host can be given in the text format as an additional parameter. beast server will not listen to connections if ip addresses of the hosts are not given in the beast server as a list, or the list is empty. so if the beast server is used to send an email to the hosts, beast server will not listen to connections, so the beast server can also be used to block the host (to send an email to the host) or find the host which is not protected from attacks by the firewall. beast server will not listen to connections if the hosts are not given in the beast server as a list, or the list is empty. so if the beast server is used to send an email to the hosts, beast server will not listen to connections, so the beast server can also be used to block the host (to send an email to the host) or find the host which is not protected from attacks by the firewall. through the text-based interface, the user can configure and manage the behavior of the beast server; the server requires a separate user account. if the user is a local administrator, the beast server can be started automatically after system boot. 5ec8ef588b
