Today, weve released our next iOS 9.3 update for iPhone. This update contains multiple bug fixes, and when combined with the update to iOS 9.3.1 on September 27th, users will get the same speed camera feature on iOS. With this newest version of our iPhone app, you can tap to update the speed camera database. As the app gets new speed camera information, the database will automatically be updated with new speed camera data. Download this update today to keep iGO Speedcam iOS on your phone (or iPad). For more information about this update or our other iPhone/iPad apps, please visit our App Store. For more on the new speed camera feature coming in iOS 9.3, check out our blog post. Weve also just announced the third and final version of iGO Speedcam Android. This update includes new speed cameras for Europe including Spain. With this latest update, users will be able to tap to update the database with new speed cameras (both on road and off road) including speed cameras (NOKAMO). With this newest version of our Android app, you can tap to update the speed camera database and after the database update its automatically handled by iGO Speedcam. Download this update today to keep iGO Speedcam Android on your phone (or tablet). For more information about this update or our other Android apps, please visit our Google Play Store. For more on the new speed camera feature coming in iOS 9.3, check out our blog post. If you want to make your device automatically update the speed camera database, or you want to be able to be notified when new updates are available, download the iGO Speedcam as an app from the App Store.

If you already have iGO Speedcam installed, you can download the update from the App Store for free. When the update is available it will automatically download and install. If you have some time, you can download the help file from Google and read about how to install the speed camera update. To download a map of all available speed cameras from your current position, all you need to do is get a UK google map address. google maps can recognise addresses for the entire country, so you don't need to be in the country for the address to be recognised. (It will try and read addresses from your previous location if you are) Download Igo8 Speedcam.txt and save the content into a text file. Create a new folder inside of the main Speedcam folder and call it speedcams, then open the newly created folder. Cut and paste the file into the newly created folder. Now you should have created a new folder named speedcams. Go back to the main Speedcam folder and click on the speedcams folder you have just created. Do not close the speedcams folder. Go to each of the following folders you have created and do the same as you did with the speedcams folder. You can close the remaining folders. Speedcams - this is where you paste the file that contains the speed camera listings. Software - this is where you will find the speed camera software to download. A complete list of GPS software (PocketGPSWorld.com) Speed Camera Database - this is where you find the speed camera database in speedcam.txt. Open the Speedcam Database in a text editor or a file browser. Save the file called speedcam.txt as a plain text file. Save the file containing the database listing in a zip folder. You can download the folder containing the zip file as a text file and then unzip the file. Copy the relevant files into the folder speedcam.

Compress your entire Speedcam folder, including all its contents. Open the new Speedcam folder containing the file speedcam.txt and copy the new file. 5ec8ef588b
