In this book, Partnoy is a good pupil from a small school for blind children. She attends this school after the loss of her eyesight. This book, along with Partnoy's sister, Herlie Fagerhaug, is a guide in which Partnoy uses to guide herself back to human status. At the beginning, Partnoy went to the school with her eyesight to take classes to learn Braille. Later, she was introduced to the other blind children and all of them helped her to guide herself. When her sister died, she couldn't go back to her former life and stay there. She tried her best to go back to her house as a blind person. However, she just couldn't manage it. Later, Partnoy tried to get a job. She got accepted into a company in Chicago that was under the Human Resources Department to do data processing, but she did not manage to do what they wanted. This book is a reflection of Partnoy trying to get back to her old life, all while trying to accept and face her current situation and her new life after being blinded. In this novel, Partnoy is twelve-years old. While in primary school, she was partially blind due to her affliction with Marfan syndrome. As a blind person, she went to school with a guide dog named Unto. She was the only one of her class to learn braille and print in small, or braille, numbers. While at the school for blind children, she got along well with the other blind children. The author also described her sense of smell as being her one great talent. Her great sense of smell was due to her being partially blind. Partnoy is described as having a mysterious character for being blind and for being an unusual person. This book gives insight into her character through her personal experiences and through the emotions she expresses towards her parents in her life. By the end of the novel, Partnoy chose to either continue her life as a blind person or take on a life as a mobile zoo keeper of animals.
