

the term 'aquaculture' means the culture of aquatic organisms in the open water of lakes, rivers and oceans, and includes: farming of freshwater fish, saltwater fish, molluscs, crustaceans, echinoderms, plankton, and shellfish. the production of aquatic organisms has been practiced for thousands of years. in the mid-1990s, aquaculture captured over 10% of the global fish production. fish farming is a type of agriculture that involves the raising of live fish in bodies of water, like ponds, rivers or lakes. most of the fish farmed are freshwater species, although some saltwater species are farmed as well. cage fish farming is a type of aquaculture where live fish are kept in a confined space. the term 'cage' refers to a fish tank, a cage-like enclosure for aquatic animals, usually used to contain them. the process of cage culture requires a deep understanding of the fish species being raised as well as biology of fish in general. it is essential to be familiar with a fish's natural feeding habits, housing requirements and normal behavioral patterns. it is important to understand the water flow in the fish's habitat to prevent water from flooding the fish's habitat. conditions inside the tanks must be suitable for the fishes to be raised. it is vital to be familiar with tanks to ensure proper water and air flow in the tanks. when raising fish for food, the farmer should ensure that the fish is free-swimming, not in a cage. understanding these needs will help aquaculture farmers to properly design and build a fish farm. a fish farm, whether it is a large or small one, may require a great deal of time and effort to construct but for the farmer it is not a small undertaking. cage culture offers many opportunities to aquaculture farmers in the world. in developing countries, the availability of fish in markets is very low and this causes a great deal of concern to fish farmers. cage culture enables farmers to raise fish in cages without requiring wild stocks or the use of exotic fish.

This will be a real life survival as they attempt to defend their base with a Yutyrannus from the Defending side, while the attacking tribe of the Protectors have a EMP shield mounted to their base to cut off the tribe from vital communication devices. The Defending tribe also hopes to create a stego and defeat the attacking tribe by killing or frightening off the wearer of the stego. This is a difficult task, as the stego must survive the attacks of both of the tribes without damage. Group IT Services is a 70 year old company that is an employee owned Indian owned business.
