its pretty simple. the ios version can be downloaded for free from the itunes application store. once the app is installed, you must allow the apple ota program to install the app from the link on the official app permissions site. if that is done, you can then uninstall the apple mobile device manager if you wish to keep it around for other ios devices you might need to manage. then you will be able to use either the normal control panel or the windows version of the program to allow the application to run. its a mobile phone barbeque tracker that will enable users to record the time or number of burns that they plan on doing that day. it will also tell them when to cook and then schedule the cooking with a time period. you may be asking yourself, what is an i.d. scanner? well, if youve come across a sticky post from me like this and cant really find an explanation, then thats probably why youre asking. the basic functioning of this scanner is that it uses a source laser to generate pulses of light at a specific wavelength, the laser is directed along the length of a piece of plastic, the light spreads out across the length of the plastic, at the end of the piece of plastic is where the id scanner scans. this particular scanner was designed for iphones, and by looking at the scanner, it seems to be a cheaper alternative to the iscan. the windows version allows you to choose the minimum and maximum levels, this includes the start and end time for the timer. the windows version also includes a slider to control how fast the time is moving. once youve started the timer the slider is initially set to the minimum, the slider can be moved to increase or decrease the time.
