Longman Dictionary Of Contemporary English 3rd Edition

the corso docente of the second-year english is entitled from phrases to texts to discourse and takes place during the first semester. it introduces the features of english syntax, with particular attention to formal, functional, and phraseological aspects. it also includes features of english texts, focusing on topics such as cohesion and coherence, text types, interpersonal and rhetorical elements of texts, as well as characteristics of texts used in special communicative situations such as journalism, advertising, intercultural communication, business communication and social media. luckily, by the mid-90s there were some new corpus-based kids on the block and i ended up switching my allegiance to the newly revised edition of the longman dictionary of contemporary english (ldoce3) for several reasons. first of all, although cobuild deserves gratitude for being first and leading the way, i had become aware of flaws in the cobuild dictionary that resulted from the imperfect construction of the cobuild corpus. second, the definitions in the ldoce3 were written within a simple 2000-word defining vocabulary that was friendly to intermediate students. and finally, despite containing many more words, the ldoce3 came in a conveniently boxed, portable, japanese edition. so, i was pleased to see that the ldoce3 was available in a pocket electronic format in japan and i spent some time comparing the differences between the print and electronic versions of the dictionary. it seemed that the electronic dictionary was more compressed than the print version, which meant that the number of definitions was reduced.

although the ldoce3 and the ldoce are very useful for advanced learners, there are a couple of reasons why i would recommend the nldoce over these two dictionaries. first of all, unlike the ldoce3, the nldoce provides a wide variety of other synonyms, antonyms, and "idioms" that are not in the dictionary. second, the nldoce has a much larger vocabulary, including words that are not included in the ldoce3. to give an example, the ldoce3 does not have the words "craving", "glut", and "overwhelm", but the nldoce does. the second-year english course in the first semester, entitled from phrases to texts to discourse, begins with a session where students are introduced to english syntax. then they move on to study the construction of english sentences, and what the features of english syntax are, which include, among others, the following: the different parts of speech in english, the syntax of the english verb, the different tenses, the different moods, and the different conditions. this is followed by a session on the different types of english texts, focusing on what is considered a literature text (or 'texto literario'), a spoken text (or 'texto oral'), and a text in a special communicative situation such as journalism, advertising, intercultural communication, business communication and social media. the course includes a session on the internet and its use for various purposes, including to research for your research papers. in the third-year english course at the university of westminster, the word 'business' has several meanings. one of these is 'business'. another is 'the action of doing business'. you may be interested to know that the word 'business' comes from the old english biz, by which is meant 'to do business'. you may also be interested to know that the term 'business' first came into use in the early 16th century. during that period, 'business' referred to the trading activities of merchants. in the 16th century, the term 'business' also came to refer to 'the life of the world'. during the 19th century, the concept of 'business' expanded to refer to 'any economic activity' and 'the making of money'. 'business' now refers to'making money','making money', 'the economy', 'the economy', 'the economic activity', 'economic activity', 'the economy'. the word 'business' also refers to 'the business of a company or organization'. so, in this course, we will discuss the 'business of business'. 5ec8ef588b
