because sql server is so ubiquitous within companys infrastructures, the licensing is very complicated and varies from product to product. basically, sql server software licenses are split into two categories, cals and standard edition. cals are what you would know as oem licenses, these are generally tied to the company and only the companys staff are allowed to install the license on any servers that are part of that companys infrastructure. standard edition licenses are more independent, and can be used by both the companys staff and other companies and even individuals. sql server is very powerful, and can be used for many different things. however, it is very important to keep track of your servers licenses and how they are all assigned. comparing sql server licensing is important for many reasons. some of the most important reasons are: if your company is using more than one sql server, you can check the license status of each. this can tell you the status of every license you use. if your company is using both an oem and a standard edition you can see that your licenses are depleted, this is probably a good time to update to a new version of sql server. comparing your licenses can help you figure out which products in your license have been used the most and are in need of an upgrade. an example is that if you are using sql server 2005 standard edition and it is more than 3 years old, it is a good time to upgrade your license to sql server 2016 standard edition. this is a very simple sql server client access license, which can be installed on up to two instances of sql server on a single computer. this license is very similar to the oem license that you may have heard of. an example of this license type is: 5ec8ef588b
