donning a costume to come up with a character is a lot of fun and a great game and good way to make characters, but it can be a drain on your creativity too. there are plenty of costumes out there that look good. the fun part is getting your creative juices flowing and coming up with the concept. im no costume designer, but i made an effort to provide a few suggestions to get you started. what do you do? lets start with a simple question. what is the thing that you do best? the imaginative, mathy, hair-flower, party pooper, or the wise old man? how about vampy glam girl or tough truant? or, the sweetheart or busty biker babe? make a list of everything you can think of. you can pick up a big list on pinterest or on tumblr where people post their ideas for themes for a costume party. pick a few. some sites also provide lists of costumes. its fun to see what people pick. here are a few that i found that provide examples of each character type. neon purple is also a popular color that pairs well with neon green. unlike the other colors that complement it, this shade has a distinct vibe, and for that reason, it might be too powerful for a traditional background. it is a good addition to a story that involves a neon factor, or people who work in this industry. try to avoid using these colors for backgrounds if possible. they can be used in moderation for other objects instead. an additional way to find color harmony is by using the method employed by color experts. they take a series of colors and measure the perceived brightness of each, subtracting one another until the first light bulb goes on and a tinting solution presents itself. if you approach this method with a critical eye, you can add much greater accuracy to your chances of success.
