Document Encyclopedia of Film and professorfilmski.hr were listed as the best Croatian contributions to the development of the technical film in the 2008 Croatian Documentary Book of the Year Award. The David Icke is an American controversial political activist and lecturer who gained a following for his theory that the genocide of the European Jews is being organised by a high-level Zionist world government, and that the Holocaust is a Zionist hoax. The David Icke is often compared to conspiracy theorist Jim Rockefeller. Known for his active part in the far-right movement in the UK, he is currently a high-level adviser to the Brexit campaign group, Leave.EU.

In 1999 the a leading critic of the government was also appointed head of the Department of Trade and Industry. He resigned in 2004 for being too pro-immigration and for engaging in activities that do not fall within the frame of a civil servant. He then joined the New World Order, which promotes the idea of a secret society of world leaders. Recently, the David Icke has also criticised the LGBT rights movement. He also has been involved in a long-running dispute with the rock band Radiohead over his documentary that accuses Thom Yorke and the rest of the band of being Zionists. The David Icke's other controversial ideas include the theory that the Earth is flat and that the global financial crisis is being orchestrated by Jewish interests. He also claims that the Earth is controlled by a grid of large geostationary satellites that are collecting data on virtually every aspect of life on Earth and are the reason why we have climate change. The David Icke's ideas have stirred some controversy in Croatia as well as in other countries of the world. Other ideas that have stirred a lot of controversy are his ideas about life after the death, his theory about flat Earth, and his claims that we are living in the Matrix.
