i see your point chris, the list of macros that can be used with the code content processor is extensive and i dont think i can expect the user to include a list of macros to be translated into the code section of all the different filetypes. but if in a few years time there is interest in doing that then i'll see if i can do a write up on something like that. is there a way to not list the and in the code box? i am giving the student the actual string that contains the line break so they are able to press enter and have the string be read and captured as text and assign it to a variable, and the "n" and "r" characters prevent the assignment of this text into the code box. paul, could you help me with translating one of my customer's terms. they sent me an example for germany and i have translated it and have turned it into a template. i have set the target language to be german. when i click on the checkbox next to the template in the terminology tab i am given the option to download the file as a liff or an xml. if i click on the liff it says that the file is not a valid liff but if i click on the xml it says that the file is not a valid xml. i then click on the xml lister to enable the embedded xml content processor but it doesn't seem to be working. any ideas thanks tom l ok, i am on screen 2 and i want to use these settings for the file type: subject: "subject of the file" description: "description of the file" filter strings: "filter pattern : all: ["all files"] text: ["text files (.txt)", ".txt"]
