his book, this is what boys are made of: investigating japan's child sex cult, is out now and a sequel has been announced. [28] matsuda first explored these ideas in his 2010 book, this is what girls are made of, which, according to his website, is currently out of print. he has written a number of interviews and essays on the topic of child sexualisation and regularly speaks on it. he has a patreon account for donations to fund his book projects. target=_blank the issue of 18-year-old boys in japan has been more complicated than the teenage boys his essay claims to be about, the times says. the countrys criminal code makes it illegal to have sex with a person under the age of 20 and 18-year-olds are being booked in the number of cases. the countrys sexw magazine claims in the times that japanese men are sexually fixated with middle-aged women while women say that is not the case. the irony is particularly strong given that the mother of the teenage boys in the story is actually chinese, not japanese. in fact, the only time the term is used in the essay is when the author writes that the "shota" male he met at the gym " looked like a shota." the author never actually says what the term actually means and has instead used the term to describe his own fantasies about the potential for encounter with a young boy. andersson told the daily dot that he was aware of his critics before submitting his paper. he says that he knew his critics were coming from the start, and he felt fortunate that it was mostly critics of his work on boys and on shota in general. the media attention and the criticism has made him think of his work, and the paper has allowed him to have a deep conversation with himself about it.
