The update also introduces Adobe Dictionary, a file search feature that helps users find and find files via the file name, description, and metadata of the file—any combination of the three that can be used to uniquely identify any given file. Location tags, audio, video, stills, and much more can be used for metadata that system-wide search tools may not. This is especially useful when navigating your deep hierarchy of folders. Adobe Dictionary is similar to the Spotlight search feature in macOS, the one that automatically fills in the search terms you type in the type bar or a file's window. This is all well and good; it's just one of those features that Adobe should integrate into Lightroom instead of adding another. I don't think that would be a bad thing, though, considering how each has their own set of unique tools and features. One additional big feature of the new update is Adobe Camera Raw (ACR), which is meant to replace Lightroom's Catalog feature. It's currently a camera-specific selection that only imports images into ACR and does not import, copy, or otherwise give a file reputation to your Lightroom catalog. There are, however, some advanced tools that are available only in ACR and will be coming to Photoshop at some point, which is a good thing. New features include improved healing with the Patch tool, stronger red eye correction, and the ability to work non-destructively in the Develop module. New Brush Finder does away with the cumbersome and intrusive help window, making Selecting Brushes 50 percent faster. Another good thing is that the old export options are gone and we only have New Image or Merge to go with Export. The New Image button above the Export option is also a good tip for people who use a keyboard shortcut to quickly export from Photoshop. The update also includes better color correction settings.

The next version of Photoshop also includes exciting productivity benefits. Photoshop CC includes:

- A revamped version of the RAW Converter that automatically identifies and corrects data loss;
- Smart sharpen tools that automatically increase sharpness when needed;
- A new toolkit for trimming video clips.

If you are using objects in an image, then you can find the highest resolution version for a modern resolution of 4k. If not, you can choose to print the image so you can see the detail of the work. These new features are part of a revolutionary project to transform the way users work with images. The Ink Pie Project brings the best of the Web to Photoshop desktop software with new capability for so much amazingly powerful image creation. And with the new features you can make websites and web-ready images using the JavaScript code. To make full use of this amazing web creation power, the Photoshop team is working with the UI team to include the latest versions of the web technologies and tools. For example, the current version of Adobe Edge Web Fonts for InDesign can be accessed remotely and installed. This initiative will help make everyday tasks like monitoring your digital photos and videos, and editing and sharing them, both easier and more fun. And to help you work with your images faster, the Photoshop web app will feature the same productivity enhancements as the desktop. Designers are telling us that they want to quickly and easily design a single image and then share it with others through a creative process that works across the desktop and the web. Hence, the design thinking behind the new sharing capabilities in Photoshop.

In addition to the tools, there are three progress bars that check the speed of the operations and the predicted time. The leftmost progress bar indicates the percentage of the editing operation like pixel selection, color overlay, etc. The second progress bar indicates the progress that is happening while the normal mode is opened. The third progress bar indicates the time of the predicted working time of the project.
