One of the most popular ways that companies get new products on the road is through beta programs. Beta testers provide a main reason for this, as most of them are motivated by the promise of new or better features that a given product could offer. Adobe's Catalyst release strategy provides an option for companies to leverage a beta version of a product to show early demos of their upcoming works of art. These programs allow early users of the products to experience the products before they are released to the public. This helps both the beta testers and the users to provide significant feedback for the next steps for development. As with all other major releases, it can be expected that Adobe will release a minor version after a major release to fix issues, improve component compatibility, and improve performance. In 2020, Adobe has released Photoshop 2020.1, which includes some improved performance and a completely new IRIS Film scan mode. It offers correction tools for a more accurate scanned output, and has improved the Red-Eye Fix filter as well as the Sharpen tool. Slight enhancements to the Pixel Bender tool, the Ink Sketch tool, and the Color Panel workflow have also been added.
