We have the right TV and movie brand for you to buy.Sally, Here are some random thoughts about how we should handle UBS in the execution of our long-term transport model. El Paso's demand forecasts for '01 have the pipeline volume numbers reduced by about 2.8 Bcf/d. What's the impact of this in the baseline? It seems like "lost" to me. From the El Paso Company Web site, the system was upgraded in 1998. The line is 33" in diameter from the compressor station to the network. Is this size of line ok for the volumes that we're modeling? I'm also curious what's the ETS model for the El Paso/West Texas capacity market and what the post-opening volumes/prices might be? The El Paso agent has looked at the Canadian Rockies and the Eagle Ford as potential markets for this pipeline. As a reminder, I'm not sure if these things are available in Canada yet - in any case this line is not eligible for cross-border allocation. See you later! KeithLithographic printing is based on the repetition of steps, each of which results in the removal of information in a previously applied layer of a material. In general, a lithographic printing plate is provided that is composed of a lithographic base material. The lithographic base material is first provided with a hydrophilic surface for background printing. The surface of the lithographic base material on which the hydrophilic area is provided is also referred to as a water receptive surface. The hydrophilic surface serves as a background area on which the hydrophilic material that is to be transferred to the surface of a lithographic print can be placed. Upon contact with an aqueous solution that can be generated by a fountain solution, this hydrophilic material transfers from the background surface of the lithographic base material. A printing ink then is transferred to the surface of the printing plate. Such transfer can be made either
