Capture NX-D's Image Recovery Wizard offers the user a quick and easy way of correcting the most common imaging artefacts and adjusting images. The features that are provided in the system wizard include those which are used for adding missing details to photos such as right clicking on an image and selecting "Open recovery editor", applying lens corrections to the image and recovering subject & background areas. It is compatible with a variety of digital cameras including Canon, Nikon, Sony, Panasonic and JVC models. Allowing up to 5 images to be converted at a time, the software can correct colour defects, remove red-eye from pictures and blank out blemishes on the subject. Team members check what features they can implement and decide on how they might best capture the areas that need the most improvement and add other new features. You won't find any of the new ad-hoc filters in the version of Lightroom released today. Do I feel this is a slight disappointment? Sure, but not really a big deal as some of them are only available in the paid version. The Bottom Line. I am most happy with the awesome Family Library feature, that allows both lightening the workload and re-purposing of images within the same catalog. Plus I like that back ups remain in the library while syncing to my laptop if I have to do so. The Bottom Line. New pro-level features for package processing and native Lightroom plugins are a must have. Plus the ability to sort the Raw Converter screen for a much quicker workflow is good too.

This is especially useful for those who shoot in RAW and often manually adjust their exposure settings. After saving your adjusted exposure as a JPEG, you can have it cross-faded to your other adjusted exposures, just like the exposure adjustment panel in PS Camera, before exporting the final image. And because you're working in the Adjustments panel, you can slide changes from adjusted images up to adjustment to the layer where you'd like the adjustment to be applied. Quickly make an adjustment and cross-fade it into your other adjustments and save as an entirely edited file with one click! You can even adjust by percentages or get a customizable fade. e3d0a04c9c
