With the implementation of the GPU APIs it will be possible to route all GPU processing on the unified low-overhead render pipelines to the GPU. Today's native APIs, while offering the capability to render the pipeline on the CPU, bring about the necessity of using the latter to achieve frame-rate limiting due to CPU overhead. Some of the other native APIs of the current generation, while sparingly offered, are not well optimized and cause the application to fall back to the use of the Vulkan or OpenGl backends of the driver and the windowing, leading to higher CPU usage and thus, preventing the application from achieving the desired frame-rates.
